Course Eligibility

The US CPA course is commonly pursued by individuals who have completed a bachelor's degree in commerce, accounting, or a related field. It is also suitable for M.Com and MBA students or graduates, as well as CA Inter qualified candidates and working professionals with a background in finance or accounting.

Eligibility for Examination

To be eligible to appear for the US CPA exams, candidates must generally have completed 120 credit hours of education. These credit hours can be fulfilled through a combination of academic qualifications and professional certifications.

Accepted Qualifications

The US CPA course accepts candidates with a background in commerce, accounting, or finance. Common qualifications include B.Com, M.Com, MBA (Finance), CA Inter or Final, and other relevant degrees from recognized universities.

- CA Intermediate students along with B.Com qualified students (Need to check the eligibility)
- CA Final students along with B.Com qualified students (Need to check the eligibility)

Typical
Undergraduate Program

A standard 3-year undergraduate program like B.Com typically earns 90 credit points (30 credit points per year). However, no other professional commerce courses will provide the required credits to appear for the CPA exams and to be eligible for the CPA license.

How to meet the 120 credit point requirement:

Postgraduate Courses:

Students who have completed their first year of post-graduation (PG) can earn the remaining 30 credit points required to meet the 120 credit points threshold for the CPA exams

Requirement for Licensing

To obtain a CPA license, candidates must meet the following requirements:

150 Credit Hours of Education

Candidates must have completed 150 credit hours of education to qualify for a CPA license. This typically involves completing the required 120 credit hours for the CPA exam and an additional 30 credit points through postgraduate studies or other approved courses.

Work Experience

Candidates must gain 1-2 years (or 2000 hours) of work experience in fields such as tax, audit, accounting, or consulting. The exact duration and type of work experience depend on the specific state where the candidate is applying for the license. This experience is critical in ensuring that CPA candidates are ready to handle real-world accounting and auditing responsibilities.

Ethics Exam

Candidates must pass an on-demand ethics exam as part of the certification process. The requirements for this ethics exam may vary depending on the state in which the candidate is applying. The ethics exam tests the candidate's understanding of professional conduct, ethical standards, and the responsibilities of a CPA.
